Att'y. A. Krusemark Wins Two Vitally Important Decisions

The second district appellate court at Ottawa has reversed and remanded the decision of Circuit Judge Edwin L. Wilson in awarding Terry Lewis, Mokena farmer, $1000 damages against Peter Neimann, Mokena and his son Lester.

Lewis filed suit against the father and son in the Will County Circuit Court in November of 1934 charging that the two Niemanns had beaten him with an iron pipe. According to the petition Lewis had been a tenant on the Niemann farm and was leaving the farm at the time he was attacked.

After hearing evidence in the case last fall, Judge Wilson found the Niemanns guilty of "malicious assault" and entered a judgement in behalf of Lewis for $1000.

In reversing the decision and sending the case back to Will county, the upper court did not review all the evidence but based the decision largely on technical points raised by Attorney Albert H. Krusemark.

Attorney A. H. Krusemark who is the village attorney for Orland Park scored a victory in the long drawn out litigation of the village of Orland Park and the Wabash railroad. The railroad company had decided to close the only subway in the village and when the village protested this action the case was placed before the Illinois Commerce Commission. A week ago the commission handed down a decision that it had no jurisdiction in closing subways, but it advocated the construction of subways under railroads as a safety measure and was decidedly opposed to having such subways closed which would create more grade crossing dangers.

GIANT SKI JUMP AT SOLDIERS FIELD CHICAGO FEB. 6TH

They're moving the mountain to Mahomet again-bringing all the thrills of championship ski-jumping from the hills of faraway country-sides right to the heart of a teeming metropolis!

With all indications pointing to both a record entry and a record crowd, the third annual Chicago Times ski meet, at which the official championships of the Central U. S. ski association will be decided, will be held at Chicago's famed Soldier Field, Sunday, February 6.

Last year 65,000 fans-the largest crowd ever to meet in this country, jammed into the lake front amphitheater to thrill to the dare-devils of the airplanes as they defied space on their wooden wings.

This year lured by the cloudscrapering tower that juts 18 stories into the air, the throng is expected to exceed that mark by a wide margin.

The breath taking structure already has been completed. Its take-off perch silhouetted against the lake skyline at observatory tower height, rising a majestic 184 feet toward the sky and its icy fast under hill stretching an inviting 260 feet, it stands as an architectural challenge to the nations ace ski men.

And they're rushing to accept the challenge. The entry list early indications show, will include such famous riders as the Flying Bietilas from Ishpeming, Mich. Walter, Paul and Roy, Sverre Fredheim, Lemoine Batson, Guttorm Pauson, George Kotlark, Bruno Tassen Gunner Oman, and Martin Wingsness.

Competition will be held in all four classes, Senior A, B and Junior, and a complete winter carnival will augment the skiing.

Rep. Lottie O'Neill Guest Speaker At Tinley Club Meet

Over fifty members and guests assembled in the Methodist church in Tinley Park, Wednesday, to hear the program presented by the Woman's Club.

The Literature Department met at 11 o'clock, under the leadership of Mrs. W. W. Kester. Mrs. O. Ebenhack presented Mr. W. W. Kester who spoke on "The Significance of Modern Bible Translations." He compared Goodspeed, Weymouth, Moffett and other author translators in a very comprehensive manner.

The significance of modern Bible translations as brought out by Mr. Kester is; it gives greater accuracy, it puts the text in everyday language and with the new arrangements, it hopes to get the people to read the Bible more with the desire that it will once again become the book of the common people where it first originated.

At two o'clock the president called the meeting to order. After the pledge of allegiance to the flag, Mrs. Ebenhack welcomed the guests on behalf of the Woman's Club. Guests were present from Mokena, Oak Lawn and Tinley Park.

Mrs. Irvin Stover spoke on behalf of her department, Art and brought out many interesting points. Mrs. Walter Johnson, American Citizenship chairman, spoke in behalf of her department.

Mrs. J. C. Funk chairman for the Park Ridge School for Girls, read a number of very interesting letters from the girls in the Illinois Cottage to whom the club sent gifts at Christmas. The girls were all very happy to receive these gifts.

As Legislation was the theme of the afternoon program, Mrs. Ebenhack presented Mrs. Wm. Semmler, chairman of the Legislation department who spoke briefly of that department.

In presenting the speaker of the afternoon, Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill of Downers Grove, State representative of the 41st Senatorial district comprising DuPage and Will counties, Mrs. Semmler stated that Mrs. O'Neill has been representative since 1923 and is now finishing her sixth term.

Mrs. O'Neill as usual, was a very interesting speaker, holding her audience's attention to the last word.

Mrs. O'Neill spoke of the part of women in the legislation, told many of her experiences as she was the first woman to be seated in that capacity in Springfield. She reviewed Bills in the House which she wanted the citizen present to be acquainted with. One was, Senate Bill No. 1, which is the State School Board Bill which does away with the local school boards and giving the governor the power to appoint a Board which the bill states should be non-political and who would set the minimum standards for the schools of the state. They also would compel consolidations which would work a hardship in many districts, Chicago's Rialto took on the glamour of Hollywood last night when the motion picture, "In Old Chicago", made its mid-west premiere at the Apollo Theatre.

Coming from the Twentieth Century Fox Studio lot in Hollywood to attend the premiere show of Chicago's own picture were June Lang, Brian Donlevy and Cesar Romero. These stars accompanied by Harry Brand, studio executive, arrived Tuesday on the Santa Fe Chief at the Dearborn Street station and were taken to the Lake Shore Drive Hotel.

Thursday night they appeared before the microphones set up in the lobby of the Apollo Theatre and posed for newsreel cameras, photographers.

Other stars and celebrities who attended the gala Hollywood premiere at the Apollo were, Judith Allan, Mayor and Mrs. Edward J. Kelly, Governor Horner, State's Attorney Courtney, Potter Palmer, Mrs. Eddie Cantor and her daughter Edna, stars appearing in local theatres and a long list of socially prominent Chicagoans:

Mrs. Ferdinand W. Peck, Wm. V. O'Brien, Mr. and Mrs. Carter H. Harrison, Mrs. Robert S. Gregory, Mrs. Daniel J. Schuyler, Frederick Tuttle, Mrs. Frank G. Logan, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Loesch, Mrs. Frederick T. West, Judge and Mrs. George A. Carpenter, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Gibbs, Mrs. Eugene S. Talbot, Wallace Rice, Chas. H. Coles, Carolyn Tyler and Herma Clark.

Special details of police were assigned to Randolph Street to make it possible for ticket holders to reach the theatre; a battery of powerful search lights, red fire and flood lights bathed the Randolph and Clark street corner with colorful lighting effects. Loud speakers announced the arrival of prominent persons and radio station WIND broadcast the stirring premiere of Chicago's own great motion picture.

The story of "In Old Chicago", is the story of Chicago and the O'Leary family during the glamorous days between 1854 and 1871 when Chicago was beginning to grow. The re-enactment of the great Chicago Fire of October 8 and 9 furnishes a thrilling climax to the picture from the time that Daisy, Mrs. O'Leary's temperamental cow, kicks over the lamp until the city is shown in ashes with refugees knee deep in Lake Michigan's waters.

"Where now, master?"
"We walk to La Barranca," said Arnaldo and set off, picking his way along the dry bed of the arroyo until he struck the fresh trail Juanito had failed to take.

Two hours later they came upon Van Suttart's damaged car and examined it with interest; soon afterward they arrived at the rope bridge, crossed it successfully and headed for the hacienda's nearest gate.

Not until the two strangers were within a stone's throw of the outer wall did Joyce recognize the taller of them and utter a cry.

Accompanied by Dirk he dashed down to the great court and with his help opened the zaguan and then the outer gate. She held out both hands, her eyes shining with welcome.

"How on earth did you get here? You haven't walked all the way, have you?"
Arnaldo had raised his hat. He dropped it on the ground, took her hands, gave her a gleaming smile, nodded at Van Suttart, shrugged his shoulders and pointed backward with his chin. It was as though he had spoken, told them in so many words where, how and when his car had been ditched.

"So you changed your mind," said Dirk.

"Yes," said Arnaldo. "Something happened to make me change my mind."

"What do you mean?" asked Joyce. "What are you two talking about?"

"I asked Arnaldo to come with me," explained Dirk, "but he refused to take part in a sentimental gesture."

"Quite true," admitted Arnaldo, "but that was before I knew Miss Sewell, scornful of the role of victim, had shot up Dorado." He looked around curiously. "Where are your 18 gringos?"

"What gringos?" asked Joyce, bewildered.

Taking out his wallet Arnaldo extracted the clipping the minister of war had handed him and passed it to Joyce. "Read it. I'm here on a semi-official mission to investigate."

She glanced through the inspired account of the taking of La Barranca and the further she read the more did her eyes and cheeks blaze. She crushed the paper in her fist, started to throw it away, then changed her mind, smoothed it out and slipped it inside her pullover.

"It's an outrageous lie," she said, "based on a grain of truth. You seem to have come prepared to stay. I'm glad, because this fantastic fabrication will need some talking over." She led the way into the inner patio and no sooner had she crossed its threshold than the air of a chateleine enveloped her. At ease and competent she gave directions to Luz, then turned to Arnaldo.

"You're tired and you must be hungry. As soon as you've had a wash there'll be food ready in the small dining room. Perhaps Mr. Van Suttart will show you where it is."

"He won't need to," said Arnaldo. "I've been here before."

She cast him a curious and startled glance, but the placidity of his expression reassured her. Nevertheless a certain uneasiness persisted, causing her to put off anything in the nature of a showdown. During the afternoon she attended to her many duties and took another horseback lesson, still omitting to tell Dirk she had ridden as a child. Adan appeared, refreshed by a nap, and encouraged her. The same superficiality marked the dinner hour, Don Jorge alone scorning to utter polite nothings.

"Wheels within wheels," said Don Jorge quite suddenly, "and a young girl sets them all to turning. Margarita Fonseca who would never have moved save for her hatred of the Manifest Destiny. Onelia, out to get with a single stone Dorado, his ancient enemy, and the minister of war. The American ambassador trying desperately to save his face and perhaps his job. Adan Arnaldo—"

"Yes?" prompted Arnaldo coolly.

"What about me?"

Don Jorge, scowling, avoided a direct answer. "Gentlemen," he continued, "we are here either as guests or servants of the senorita Joyce Sewell, lawful mistress of La Barranca. This is a world—her world. We have plenty of room for defenders, none for neutrals, tourists or spies. I'll ask you first, Mr. Van Suttart. Are you friend or foe?"

"Friend," said Dirk promptly.

"Now you, Adan," said Don Jorge, "and don't speak too hastily. You and I have met before, though you sat at Dorado's table while I ate with servants. Do you come as friend or foe?"

Arnaldo flicked the ash from his cigarette and sat staring at the brightened tip. "Here is my answer: how far I'll go for the senorita is her business and mine and nobody else's."

"Leonardo!" Don Jorge shouted, "a spy is among us!"

"You, a Mexican," cried Joyce,

"and you're not ashamed to say that!"

Luz thrust her head in at the door. "Do I send for Leonardo?"
"No!" commanded Joyce. She turned toward Don Jorge. "Maxie, if you and Mr. Van Suttart don't mind, I'd like to talk to Adan Arnaldo alone."

Promptly Don Jorge turned ceremonious. He rose, bowed, faced toward his own room, stumped straight to the door, stood back to force Dirk to pass, then entered and closed it with emphasis.

"Let's get out of here," said Adan. "I remember a big shabby room with a huge fireplace."

"That's where I meant to go when we'd finished talking," said Joyce.

The life of a hacienda is not that of a house but of a village, sometimes almost of a town. Articles and values are easily destroyed or lost, but certain ingrained fundamentals take years to die. The hereditary blacksmith, the itinerant piano-tuner, a teacher of sorts for the crowded school and a horse and cattle foreman to carry on the banner of scorn for the equally important chief of the muleteers are threads not lightly torn from a social fabric however raveled. The drawing room gave evidence of this truth. The furniture had been maltreated, but the curtains had been recently patched by an expert nee-die. A square had been cut from the corner of a lovely Persian rug to make a saddle blanket for Mi General, but the elements of comfort remained. Witness a well-tended fire on the hearth and the piano in tune. Adan walked to it as if drawn by a lodestone. He struck a chord, then sat down and rippled the keys in melodious undertone to his words.

"We can be honorable with foreigners," he repeated, looking up at Joyce across the corner of the closed sounding board. "I am authorized to offer you $50,000 for La Barranca if you'll agree to leave the country at once. Think it over. Fifty thousand to get out, nothing but trouble if you try to stay."

"La Barranca isn't something you can sell," she stated. "My father bought it—that's true—but not from people with their roots still in the soil. They were gone, uprooted by their own folly, and he bought it from a bank. I was born here. The fibers of my being are tied to stone, vine and tree. I owe lip service to two governments, but not allegiance. Allegiance from the heart strikes deep. It has to stand on a foundation of faith and love. Where will I find them if not here? How can I sell La Barranca without selling my people and myself?"

Adan stopped playing, his fingers hovering over an unstruck chord.

"Then what course do you intend to pursue," he murmured, his eyes on the keys, "and just where do you think it will lead you?"

"There's one word that covers it all," said Joyce. "Fight. That's what we do wherever we are—in El Tenebro, I here or in Elsinboro. Every woman, every man, wherever we are, we fight to live though we fight and go down."

Adan's hands crashed out the chord as he rose and faced her. He stared at her out of a daze. "Courage always wears a glorious face," he said as if he were explaining some mystery to himself. "Fight and go down. You, alone—yes. But—" His hands went out gropingly, touched her arms and passed down to her wrists. A voice within him, long stilled, was striving for utterance through fingers and eyes because lips are so prone to lie. She thrilled not to him but to his ardor. Since fire is a stranger to no man, warming friend and foe, she yielded, moved forward, not from any reasoning but by the simple law that sparks fly upward. Then he was holding her, kissing her, and she was kissing him. Yet, somehow, he was far away and she was with him, as though she dreamed. His voice, continuing, broke the spell. "But you and I together is another story. I have the power and you the land and no government—past, present or to come—will fool too much with Adan Arnaldo. It's practical, logical; it will be a cinch."

Cheeks burning, she rushed from the room and along the balcony of the patio. As she turned its angle she saw Dirk coming from Don Jorge's study and it was all she could do to keep from running to cast herself in his arms. Instead she stopped short and asked herself if she were crazy.

He came to a halt a few paces away. "Senor Maximiliano asked me to make the rounds," he explained and hesitated. "I don't suppose you'd care to be bothered."

"That's where I was going myself," said Joyce. "Do you want to come along?"

Together they turned down the passage giving access to the stair leading to the esplanade of the roof.

Under the blaze of moon and stars Joyce, followed by Dirk, visited the four bastions. "Awake, Leonardo?" she murmured. "Awake, Senorita." "Is everything quiet?" "All is quiet, Senorita." The rounds finished she started toward the spiral stair by which they had ascended, walking slowly at first, then with a sudden acceleration in her pace.

She moved toward the parapet and they sat down, he beside her, their shoulders barely touching. They sat in silence, their senses drenched in beauty. Her heart swelled until she knew she must speak or choke.

"It's beautiful and terrible. I wonder if anywhere else in the world beauty and terror walk hand in hand."

"Me, I'm wondering who I am," said Dirk. "You're real. You're part of the night, part of this amazing place. You had a name that meant nothing—nothing at all. But now you've shaken it and become real. If I should never see you again, yet live for a thousand years, I couldn't forget you. I'm not being fresh, I'm not making love, but something belongs to me from now on—something you haven't given that I didn't try to take. You're real but what about me? I've turned into nothing. These words I'm speaking—are they a dream, or can you hear them too? Can you?"

"I've heard them all," said Joyce, "but I can't be sure you said them aloud or whether my own lips spoke them. Because as I seem real to you, so are you to me. I'm not afraid of you. I wasn't afraid of you before, but I disliked the person you were. You wore a Joseph's coat made up of the things I most despise. Now you've thrown it away—or perhaps you've only taken it off and presently will slip it on again."

"Perhaps," he admitted mournfully, "and you too."

She shivered. He took off his jacket and put it around her shoulders. Nothing was said; he had not asked her if she were cold nor did she protest he would need the coat himself.

"Name the things you despise," he said at last, staring straight ahead.

"Your false front," answered Joyce after an imperceptible pause, "your air of We-the-elect-are-holy-and-all-others-are-evil."

"Is that really the way it struck you?" asked Dirk, but did not wait for an answer. "Yes, I'm beginning to see it."

"But you mustn't think it's just you I meant. It's a lot bigger than any single one of you and it can't be covered by five minutes or five years. The air you wore was the air of the whole place—chancellery, garden and the embassy itself. Then cry out, 'Look at us! Our skins are safe wherever we go; if you want to keep yours, stay home.' It's so silly not to see the other half of that doctrine."

"What other half?" asked Dirk, puzzled.

"Stay at home yourselves," said Joyce with intensity, "do away with the House of Drones and take your consuls with you, guardians of the dollar and nothing else! Then we'd know where we stand."

"Easy now," said Dirk soothingly. "You! Your House of Drones. What if one of the bullets that hit your car had killed you? From being a parasite, a silkworm living on the pulp of the taxpayer safe at home, you would suddenly have acquired importance—such importance that you would certainly have destroyed me and possibly plunged your country in the very war you're supposed to wave back with a lily hand!" She rose, letting his coat fall from her shoulders.

"You're great," said Dirk, electrified against his will and judgment. "Whether you're right or not, you're great."
"Pick up your coat and come with me," said Joyce. "I want to show you something."

He followed her down the spiral stair and back to the patio. She led him to her former playroom, pushed open the door and turned. "This was the day nursery where I was playing when they came in—a hundred of them riding their horses over the flower beds, trampling the rose bushes and shooting at anything that moved. 'No force against a weaker nation' was responsible for their coming; don't forget it," she pointed. "That's the door where my mother ran out, looking for me. She took three steps before they shot her. I didn't see what happened then—only the crowding men. The next thing I knew my father, carrying a funny little trunk under one arm, lifted me with the other and rushed up those steps to the balcony. They turned and saw him in time to laugh and jeer but hardly to shoot. Come; I'll show you where the bullets struck and how we escaped."

She preceded him to the balcony, then, doubling back, after passage until, doubling back, they arrived at steep stone steps leading down into a cavernous pit behind the vast kitchens and thence to a narrow postern. With a strong pull Dirk opened the door and they stepped out into such an umbrageous paradise as only the old-time haciendas of the semi-tropics can boast.

"This is the lake," said Joyce. "Lake?" laughed Dirk. "Where's the water?"

"You can't see it for the hyacinths," explained Joyce. "If it weren't for them we couldn't be here."

"Why not?"
"It wouldn't be safe. This mass of hyacinths, too thick for a boat to pass or a man to swim, mean a lot more to my safety than all the American embassies in the world put together."

"Let up," said Dirk, "please let up. I'm licked."

She turned toward him with an impulsive movement; her fingers barely touched his shoulder.

He took her in his arms so naturally she had no thought to draw back, then realization swept over her that resentment would have been silly before so spontaneous and unthinking an action. This was different from Arnaldo—so different she was another person standing in another world and awake, wide awake.

U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey Charts

Show How the Sea Rearranges Its Bed

The seas do not like their living quarters. So they build up, tear down, and rearrange their beds, writes Elliott Roberts in Nature magazine. All of which adds to the labor of man, self-appointed recorder of the changing movements of the sea and their effect on the contour of the land.

The earliest explorers of our shores knew nothing of the deeps and shoals; they were blind men groping in a strange house. The situation is now remedied by charts of our oceans and coastal waters, so that great ships steam confidently where the first comers had to sound their cautious way. Still, we are forever confronted with the sea's restless changes—deepening here, shoaling there—and the advance or recession of the shoreline on many a mile of coast. The chart makers must be forever alert to the latest changes, to keep the charts accurate.

A surveyor, busy on the coast of South Carolina, stood by his instrument on the sandy beach, just out of reach of the breaking waves. He calculated the location of the station where he stood, and was about to put it down on the chart, when he blinked. What had he found? He checked his work, and it was correct. According to the old chart, his station lay in water many feet deep, half a mile from the nearest dry land.

The United States Coast and Geodetic survey, chart makers for the United States, maintains eternal vigilance to keep abreast of all the changes that occur, especially on the more unstable and shifting portions of our coast. In many of these thousands of miles of shore line even a few years will see enormous changes. The point of Rockaway beach, opposite New York harbor, grows westward some 250 feet yearly, a matter of several miles in a lifetime. Long Beach, Coney Island and Sandy Hook are all extending themselves toward the channel.

By Their Walk

An erect posture is closely associated with self-respect. We know that any physical expression tends reflexly to produce that emotion. Therefore, not only does self-respect naturally tend to brace a man's shoulders and straighten his spine but such attitude tends to brace up a man's mind also.

Those who have lost their self-respect nearly always slouch. The pharisee, the bully or the dandy strut or swagger. There is a golden middle road that stands for self-respect and self-confidence which combined with courtesy and consideration for others, we all should acquire.

Perfect Leisure

Leisure, the highest happiness upon earth, is seldom enjoyed with perfect satisfaction except in solitude. Indolence and indifference do not always afford leisure; for true leisure is frequently found in that interval of relaxation which divides a painful duty from an agreeable occupation; a toilsome business from the more agreeable occupations of literature and philosophy.—Zimmerman.

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm. Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is the way—Not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

Indian Tribes Worshipped Jaguars
Jaguars, the largest cats in the Americas, are everything from gentle pets to man-eaters. Once they have tasted human flesh they are always the latter. Their favorite prey is the dog. Several ancient Indian tribes worshiped the jaguars. Mayans, on meeting one in the forest, knelt and awaited death. It was blasphemous to kill the beast.

The Tinley Park Garden club held the first meeting of the year Thursday, January 20th in the home of Mrs. Catherine Werth with Mrs. Wm. Beagley of Princeton, Illinois, as guest. Mrs. Beagley will be remembered by her many friends as Miss Dorothy Goebel.

Mrs. Mancke president, thanked the members for their kindness to her during her recent illness.

The lighting of the Community Christmas tree in the park was supervised by Mr. Clarence Fulton and was efficiently handled.

The following announcement is made by the Garden club of Illinois, Inc.:

"It is with great pleasure we announce to the members of the Garden clubs that for our February series of lectures we will present Miss Clare Croninevet, of Los Angeles, California.

Dates of lectures are: Thursday afternoon, February 17, 2 p. m.; Friday morning, February 18, 10:30 a. m.; Friday afternoon, February 18, 2 p. m.

Miss Croninevet, a young artist of California is becoming nationally known for her brilliant work as a designer of ability and as a colorist. She has just returned from a lecture tour in the East, where she appeared before the Garden Clubs of the New York and New Jersey Federation.

Miss Cronenewett has a studio in the shadow of the mountains just east of Los Angeles, where her "art appreciation" lectures, which have become so popular, are held.

In her garden she raises a variety of native and sub-tropical plants to provide the materials with which she works, as she has the feeling that the locality, as well as the season, should be expressed in the "mood" of the arrangement.

She will give three lectures, explaining these principles, and showing how they apply to the three schools of arrangement most often used. The Victorian, modern, and the arrangements with an oriental feeling.

No reservations will be taken for luncheon on these days, but you may secure a delicious luncheon in the Victorian room, Palmer House, for 85c or Empire room with music for $1.00

As always, these lectures are free to the members of the Garden Club of Illinois. Guests are welcome at an admission price of 50c.

Plans are being formulated to participate in the Potted Plant section of the Chicago Flower Show, Navy Pier, April 2 to 10, with Mrs. W. B. Combs of Tinley Park as Flower Show chairman.

Mrs. Jennie Klepper, Fruit and Flower Guild chairman, spread a warmth of happiness with her report of donations of fruit, jelly, toys and scrap books received for the Christmas collection from members and friends. She added to her thanks those of Mrs. Harriet E. Vitum, Head Resident.

Led in prayer by Mrs. Lulu Rogers, a loving tribute was paid to Mrs. Betty Berg and our deceased

Planning Our 1938 Crops

With the passing of Christmas and its festive season followed by the turn of the year, we less review the crop production of the year behind us and give more time in thought and planning to the year's work ahead.

As spring draws nearer our plans take more definite shape of not only the crops we are going to grow but the acreage we will assign to each. We have to make provision for our soil conservation work; some, because of Government remuneration, but most of us because we now realize that our soil will have no future, our crop yields diminish to nothing if we continue a practice of cultivation and breaking down the soil and do not at the same time plan for a replacement of the minerals and nitrogen we remove with a restoration of the soil humus.

This time last year we planned for the maximum amount of corn acreage largely because of the then prevailing market price of corn. Now while we still would like to grow a large acreage of corn, we appreciate that summer tillage of the soil is one of our most destructive processes (largely through oxidation of its organic matter); hence, if we exercise our judgment in looking to the future we know that the Government encouraged program of growing legumes and returning at least part of their growth to the soil should be done. To grow these legumes we will likely have to cut down our corn acreage from what we first hoped for. How then can we get that larger yield with less acreage? A thought that comes to some of us is that if we plant all of our corn acreage with one of the highest yielding corn hybrids for our region we may be able to give up enough acreage to the legume program, meeting Government requirements and yet have as much yield in bushels of sound corn or total feeding value with or without a silo for milk production or pork and beef gains.

This can be accomplished thru not only the selection of the proper hybrid but by adopting some practices that will increase yield thru accelerating infant corn seedling growth. This advance seedling growth not only makes greater use of the maximum sunlight intensity period of May, June and early July, but also accomplishes more growth at a time when showers are usually more frequent. It also enables weed control that will cut down weed competition with the corn for moisture in the latter maturing stages because the higher seedling plants permit earlier weed covering on both drill and hill planting.

We have good examples of the advantages of accelerated infant growth in our livestock. We can all recall how two infant calves born in mid-winter when one is fed an abundance of infant feed, milk, while the other is given only scant supply and how the favored one not only first reaches maturity but makes a superior animal yielding more profits than its less fortunate companion. The rule applies with even more force to corn infant seedlings because of the higher, sunlight intensity factor in June than later. Sunlight works on leaves; hence, the accumulative advantage of more leaf surface for the June sun.

We have also observed unevenness of corn seedling growth with some plants continuing to advance over others and ultimately having a better and bigger ear but found it a difficult matter to fathom or work out the different factors that brought about this seedling difference.

The question is how can we control these growth accelerating advantages. We do know some factors of seed shape and size selection that enable us to have a much higher percentage of the stronger and faster growing plants. To better analyze the matter, let us consider the influences affecting seedling growth in these groups: 1. Speed or quickness of germination. 2. Seedling nutrition. 3. Seedling disease; their avoidance and resistance.

Infant corn seedlings have their struggle against the soil bacteria and fungi the same saprophytic types that the babies of the human family have against the infant diseases as whooping cough, etc., as well as the disease attacks of the grown ups. But the certainty of the attacks of the infantile types are greater. Most of these seedling attacks while survived not only weaken the individual, retarding its growth but occasionally results in death. Our children would have more vitality and be stronger to fight the battles of life if they could escape these infant disease attacks. Part of the great range in strength and vigor of the grown-ups is a mute history of this infant struggle and survival.

Our corn likewise, would have more vitality, a more rapid rate of infant growth, a sturdier plant with a higher yield if they too, could escape these infant saprophytic fungi and bacterial attacks. Where we can select a seed kernel shape that is more resistant to disease attack, then the plants of a given area, say an acre, will yield more than those plants that were more susceptible and less resistant and therefore, had to suffer more from infant disease attacks which retarded their development. In other words, the acre yield will naturally be the highest of those plants that experienced the minimum of disease attack in their infancy.

What Is Home?

It has been said that a home is where the heart is. For most of us home means human companionship shared joy and sorrow. Any place where people have had such experiences may be called a home. Home is not a place for furnishings nor a house, but it is hopes and memories which cling about a place where we have lived.

Since primitive cave men first hallowed their dwellings and went to extra labor of smoothing walls and hanging skins here and there. The craving for designed walls followed that of the hanging of skins.

The home is the product of civilization and as people become more and more civilized they improve their dwelling places. This is true in looking back at the early cave men without good equipment. They were not accustomed to a radio, telephone or newspaper. What would the people of today do without these luxuries?

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

Pictures in the Looking-Glass

"Two-in-one" pictures can be snapped with the aid of a mirror. Note that the light comes from the left onto faces of the children. In mirror pictures the light must be in front of the camera, but it must also be shaded so as not to shine on the lens.

Snapping back and front views of a subject in one picture is a novel idea, but it is one of the simplest tricks in photography. All one needs is a mirror.

The subject sits or stands either in front of the mirror or barely to one side, looking into the glass. The person taking the picture stands back at a point where the camera finder shows both the back of the subject and the reflection in the mirror—and snaps the picture.

It is necessary, of course, to have sufficient light, either daylight or artificial. The light should come from one side, and fall upon the subject instead of on the mirror. Strong light such as from an electric bulb should not be allowed to strike the camera lens, as it will spoil the picture.

The artificial light to use for snapshots is that from amateur floodlight bulbs, but ordinary electric bulbs will serve for time exposures. With an ordinary 100-watt bulb and a box camera, loaded with supersensitive film and opened to its largest lens opening, an exposure of five seconds will usually serve when the bulb is three feet from the subject. Snapshots call for two of the large-sized amateur flood bulbs in reflectors three to four feet from the subject. Most amateurs prefer the snapshot method because it does not require the subject to remain still so long. When a time exposure is made the camera must be rested on a table or other firm stand.

The subject in a mirror picture should not stand too far from the mirror, because that will make the reflection too far away and too small. Also, it may bring the subject so close to the camera that he is out of focus. With a fixed-focus camera which is not meant for use closer than six feet, the subject's back should be six feet from the lens when the picture is made.

When using a focusing camera, remember that the reflection lies beyond the surface of the mirror. For instance, if the subject is three feet in front of the mirror, the reflection is three feet on the other side of the mirror. Hence, with the camera six feet from the mirror, the worker would focus at nine feet. Or, to get everything sharp, he could focus for six feet and use a very small lens opening which gives more "depth of focus."

If one has access to a dressing-table with a triple mirror, he can make four pictures in one—a back view of the subject, a full-face view, and two profiles. The two profiles are obtained by adjusting the side wings of the mirror to the proper reflecting angle.

Sam Perry Seeks Re-Nomination

Representative Joseph Sam Perry formally opened his campaign this week. He is seeking re-election to the General Assembly from this district. In his campaign he will not make the customary campaign promises, but will stand entirely upon his record.

In the General Assembly he was one of the floor leaders for the women's eight hour bill, increased compensation for injured workmen and the women's jury bill.

He actively supported all bona fide labor measures, and actively opposed all legislation that sought to discriminate against or racketeer upon industry and business. He opposed excessive appropriations and increased salaries for public officials.

Such as probate and county judges, that would unnecessarily burden the taxpayers were opposed. He cooperated with the State Administration in making necessary appropriations for the care of the aged, unfortunate and the school children which at the same time would keep the State Budget on a pay-as-you-go basis.

If his record pleases the people of his district he shall again enjoy serving them. If the record he made is displeasing to them he invites them to send some one else in his place, in as much as he will continue the same type of record.

Mr. Perry said: "It was a genuine pleasure to me to serve my District in the Legislature. During my service I strived to the best of my ability to give my people honest, clean and courteous representation."

Bernice VanderVries In Legislative Race

Mrs. Bernice T. Van der Vries, 968 Pine st., Winnetka, representative in the Illinois general assembly from the seventh, Chicago suburban district, announced Tuesday that she will be candidate for nomination for re-election at the April primaries.

Petitions to have her name placed on the Republican ballot are being circulated throughout the district this week. Mrs. Van der Vries was first chosen to be one of the district's three representatives in the lower house at Springfield in 1934 and was re-elected in 1936.

Recently her name was prominently suggested for the post of senator from the district, which embraces all Cook county outside the cities of Chicago, Evanston, Oak Park, and Cicero, but she announced that because of her association with the house during the past three years, she felt she was better equipped to serve the district and the state in that body.

Backers of her candidacy this week asserted that she "has in every sense of the word, represented her district, without yielding to the pressure of organized minorities or political factions in any party. She has given careful study to legislation and has determined her vote after consideration of the benefits to her own district and to the state."

"Mrs. Van der Vries has made a place for herself of considerable importance in the councils of the Republican party and holds the respect of the opposition and high state officials. Although urged to campaign for the senate she has decided she can be of more value in the house," it was added.

During the past session of the legislature she has served on the following committees: congressional apportionment, education, industrial affairs, insurance, municipalities, public welfare, senatorial apportionment, and waterways.

Due to the fact that the state has not been re-apportioned since the census of 1900, the seventh district is one of the most populous in Illinois, and its three representatives and its senator represent over 500,000 people.

Other members of the lower house from the district both of whose terms likewise expire this year, are Frank Foster, Harvey Republican, and Emmett McGrath, Brookfield Democrat. The senator is Chas. Baumrucker, River Forest Democrat, who was seated by the state senate in 1935 after his Republican opponent, Arthur Bidwill, had been ousted. The district is also to select a senator this year.

Let Not Your Heart Be Troubled

ST. JOHN 14

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. What a plea from Jesus. Was there ever such an admonition with such a promise? Let not your heart be troubled. Was there ever such trouble, such fear as there is in men's hearts today? And yet, he tells us to be at peace, to keep our minds staid upon Him. And then He goes on to say: In my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you and then He says: I will come again and receive you unto myself: that where I am there ye may be also. A promise that ought to touch the heart of every professed Christian. And there He says: If ye ask anything in my name, I will do it. If you love me keep my commandments. If you love your family would you not do any thing for them? Just so, if you love Jesus you will keep His commandments, not only one, but the ten, all of them.

He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father and I will love him. And then He says: Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be afraid. We are living in very, very troublesome times and yet Jesus tells us to be not afraid. He knows all about it and He says He will take care of us and that he is very soon coming and in a way that every eye shall see Him. Those that are in the grave shall be raised, both the righteous and the unrighteous and those that have kept His commandments, both the dead and the living, will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, but the unrighteous shall be struck dead. What a sad day that will be for those that have lived a life of pleasure gratifying their own selves, their own desires, to see those that have obeyed God, caught up with Jesus, to dwell in those beautiful mansions, where there is no sorrow or sickness and then to come back to this earth made new in all its beauty, to dwell here thru all eternity. Is it not worth the price you will pay now?

A National Objective

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Today in America both government and business enterprise are seeking a common objective.

It is to quicken to their accustomed pace the productive forces of the nation—and thus increase employment possibilities and the general well-being of all our people.

There have been recent indications that various leaders, both in and out of public office, realize the great need of working together toward this common end. All Americans concerned with the progress and prosperity of our people will hope that these efforts prove successful.

For, as the American people know, sound production—with its increased employment—always brings added production.

When wages are spent for food, for clothing and for the homes and recreational facilities of the average worker they create a demand for the products of the farm, the mine and the factory which requires still more employment to fulfill.

When wages decrease because production has been discouraged, that demand lags, and with it lag the employment and general prosperity that it formerly created.

No program of relief or other aid, however administered, can fill the place of sound production as a method of creating new jobs and greater income for the American people. No American prefers a bare subsistence income to the pay envelope that comes with a real job. No sound or lasting recovery can be expected until our familiar cycle of demand and production is restored.

Throughout America millions of workers and earners who understand these facts will continue to urge on our national leaders the sincere cooperation and team-play on which such recovery depends—and without which the traditional American program of advancement for all our people is halted.

Making Winter Hours Count

means most at this season of the year when dark and long winter days make time hang heavy on your hands. You can get your Spring wardrobe well started by making these days count. This is the time to sew and sew—and then when the first crocuses show their heads, you will be all ready for Spring; your wardrobe in order and the right clothes to wear. With sew-your-own patterns and a few yards of material, you can make short work of this whole business of sewing.

Practical Slip.

This four-gore slip is the choice of every woman who likes comfort. The side panels prevent the slip from twisting and turning and keep it comfortably in place on the most strenuous day. The pattern includes built-up and strap shoulder—and you can make it for your own wardrobe in a few hours at a fraction of what you would usually spend. Keep the pattern, you will use it again and again once you see how really comfortable this dress is.

Cheery Morning Frock.

No matter how many of these informal dresses you have, you never have enough. So start right in to sew now and make two or three of them for Spring. This dress (the one in center) is designed on clever shirt-waist lines and buttons from neck to hem. Piping is used at edge of collar, cuffs and pockets. It's the neatest, trimmest little frock you have ever seen. You'll enjoy it all through the summer.

Sweet and Simple.

The figure at right is wearing an afternoon frock that is as fresh and new as a daisy. The gored skirt flares like a ballerina's and the bodice is smoothly fitted, closing with two wide scallops trimmed in smart ruffling. Wear this dress for bridge parties now—and wear it all through the Spring and Summer. It is one of the most popular silhouettes—nicely made up in silk or cotton.

Pattern 1437 is designed for sizes 14 to 46 (32 to 46 bust). Size 16 requires 3 yards of 39-inch material and ¾ yard ribbon for shoulder straps.

Pattern 1440 is designed for sizes 12 to 40 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material and 2 yards of binding or braid to trim as pictured. For collar and cuffs in contrast ½ yard fabric is required.

Pattern 1341 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4½ yards of 35 or 39-inch material plus 2½ yards of machine-made pleating to trim.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

BUMBLE BEE WON'T HELP

Bee, Bee, Bumble Bee,
Wouldn't tell a thing to me!

SO SAID Peter Rabbit to himself as he sadly took his way back to the dear Old Briar Patch. Peter was tired, for he had had a long hunt to find Bumble. His nose was sore, for Bumble had thrust a sharp little lance into it to teach Peter not to poke his wobbly, inquisitive little nose into places where it had no business to be. But Peter wouldn't have minded these things if he had found out what he wanted to know. But he didn't find out a thing, and so he was anything but his usual happy self as he plodded wearily along. He was hot, tired, disappointed, and cross.

And it was all because Peter wanted to find out where the storehouse of Bumble's cousin, Mistress Busy Bee, was, so that he could tell Buster Bear, who is very fond of honey, and so make Buster his friend. He knew that it was in a hollow tree, probably high up, somewhere in the Green Forest, but how ever was he, who couldn't climb trees and couldn't fly, going to find it? Then Jimmy Skunk had suggested that if he wanted to find out, which he didn't, he would ask some one who knew to tell him. Right away Peter had thought of Bumble Bee. Of course Bumble Bee would know, being own cousin to Busy Bee. So Peter had run all over the Green Meadows trying to find Bumble Bee, only to get stung on the nose and find that Bumble couldn't if he would and wouldn't if he could tell where Busy Bee's storehouse was.

Now Peter and Bumble are old friends and neighbors, and it surprised Peter to have Bumble refuse his request. But when Bumble, who is very short-tempered and much given to rumbling and grumbling, not only refused, but took Peter to task and gave him a regular scolding for trying to find that storehouse, Peter hadn't been able to find a word to say.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, Peter Rabbit. Yes, sir, you ought to be ashamed of yourself to ask an old friend like me to make trouble for one of his own relatives," Bumble had said. "It would be bad enough for you to try to make trouble yourself, and I wouldn't have believed it of you before this. But to try to get me to tell you where my cousin's storehouse is so that that great robber, Buster Bear, can steal all she has worked so hard to make and save is—why, it's—it's just simply awful! Buz-z-z, buz-z-z, I never heard of such a thing! How would you like to have your cousin, Jumper the Hare, go tell Reddy Fox of a hiding place where he would be sure to catch you? You'd think it's perfectly dreadful, wouldn't you? Well, what you have asked me to do is just as bad. Yes, sir, it's every bit as bad."

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself, Peter Rabbit."

Now Peter had not once thought of it in that way. It was a new idea to him. He thought it all over after he got back to the dear Old Briar Patch as he nursed his sore nose. Little by little he began to see that Bumble was right. "Why," said he to himself, "I didn't think of it in that way. Of course, I wouldn't want Bumble to do anything to hurt one of his own relatives. Of course not. I didn't once think that finding that storehouse and telling Buster was going to hurt any one. But, of course, if he stole the honey, why—why—well, I wouldn't like it if it were my honey."

Boulder Dam Today

Wedged in Black canyon of the Colorado river, Lake Mead is the huge creation of Boulder dam, seen in the foreground. Lake Mead is 115 miles long and now holds 15,250,000 acre-feet of water, enough to cover West Virginia to a depth of one foot. Eventually it will hold 30,500,000 acre-feet. Dark Walls Can Be Brightened By Simple Plan

By BETTY WELLS

"My walls have distemper," she wailed. The lady was exaggerating but nevertheless dark walls, the sort that aren't deliberately planned by a smart decorator, can present a difficult problem. Not many years ago many English type homes were built with darkish rough plaster walls. We don't think the builders had the esthetic values so much in mind as the fact that such walls are extremely practical, never showing dirt or children's finger marks. But what to do about them if the budget doesn't allow a complete change of wall-view?

And what if our furniture bought to last a lifetime does not exactly fit in a background like that? With the dark tan rough plaster, the ideal type of furniture is Jacobean—heavy, sturdy oak that dignifies the dark walls. But with a heterogeneous group of furniture, it is still possible to achieve a pleasant, warm room, even if the walls are darkly forbidding.

The rug should have brilliance. Use a bright Turkish type oriental, a modern rug or a twist weave broadloom in a warm vibrant color. Or polish the floor to shining splendor and use bright throw rugs. The sombre walls won't matter if the floor is gleaming. Windows should be treated simply, yet colorfully. Try stripes—clear greens with pale rust, bright blues with deep duobonnet—in simply tailored draw-type draperies and with no glass curtains, of course.

Furniture can be pulled together with slip covers; a rough textured tweedy material in neutral-toned stripes might be the thing for the sofa, while incisive tones of the colors used in the draperies could be picked out for upholstered chairs. Season with ceramics and get as many highlights in the rooms as possible. Perhaps a huge green bottle standing in one corner will catch the light from the hall and drag it by its heels into the room.

If one or two pieces of furniture can be added try a long, low oak table in front of the fireplace or a sturdy, straight-backed Jacobean arm chair.

Washington
DigestNational Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—Many times, I have written in these columns about the confused state of affairs in the federal government and the Roosevelt administration. I wish I were possessed of sufficient wisdom to undertake an analysis of them, as they exist now, for it probably would be helpful to all. But having no such vast wisdom, I shall have to content myself with the service of reporting on several circumstances of recent development and let it go at that.

For several weeks now, we have witnessed a steady stream of callers at the White House. There have been some labor leaders but mostly the list of callers whom the President invited were the greatest of American industrialists, the "economic royalists" whom Mr. Roosevelt has so roundly denounced from time to time, or whenever it served political purposes to attack them publicly. The purposes of having these men visit the President, as announced at the White House, were to consult and try to find ways and means of checking the current depression.

As I said, these White House visitors were the very "economic royalists" whom Mr. Roosevelt has attacked with such apparent satisfaction throughout the last five years. Indeed, among their number were some of the "sixty families" upon whom Secretary Ickes of the Interior department, and Robert H. Jackson, trust busting assistant attorney general, have been heaping abuse as the folks who "control" America. Anyone who will take the trouble to review the President's speeches and the more recent barrage of attacks by Messrs. Ickes and Jackson cannot help wondering if those men are crooks and if they crush the "common pee-pul," as charged, why their advice can be any good now.

Nextly, it is hard to understand why or how anything is to be gained by consulting with men of that type in a serious effort to solve the problems of the current depression and set off dynamite under them at the same time. That is what happened. Mr. Roosevelt announced with vehemence at a press interview that all holding companies "must go." They must be eliminated from American economic life and at once; there can be no toleration of corporations that are organized to hold the stock of other corporations, etc., etc. He has taken a definite position on that before as regards power companies and drove a bill through congress to eliminate them. This time, he wants to go much further. Which is proper, if that be his policy. But here is the peculiar thing. Two hours after he made his announcement, he had a dozen men in conference who represented the very thing he was denouncing and was seeking their advice. It seems paradoxical, to say the least.

On top of these conferences that have brought scores of prominent industrial captains to Washington at the President's invitation, there is to be noted an entire absence of any administration action looking to release of business to do its part in taking on unemployed workers. I have talked to men in congress of every shade of opinion and they are all awaiting some word as to the President's views. Their position is that the President wants to take the lead in mapping a program and most of them, I believe, will help him carry it out. They feel also that for them to start development of a program of their own makes them subject to White House criticism if the legislation fails to meet New Deal specifications. So they simply wait!

In the meantime, the depression has sunk deeper and deeper. I frankly believe that in some localities it is right now as bad as anything we saw in 1932. Business men are frightened to death and will not expand their businesses because of the danger that they will lose everything they have, and individuals are frightened and will not spend more money than is absolutely necessary. In other words, there is again a lack of confidence that is appalling. It seems to center on Mr. Roosevelt as it centered on Mr. Hoover in 1930 and 1931.

I can judge the whole situation only by attempting to compose the observations that I gather from countless conversations. If this consensus be accurate, then it would appear that current fears result from an inability of anyone to know what Mr. Roosevelt will do next. That is to say, the expressions stressed statements that his policies "lack continuity," that he changes "overnight," that he "attacks business with one hand and kicks it in the pants with one foot and asks it to take the load off of the government at the same time;" that he takes advice "of a lot of nincompoops on finances who can't even balance their own household budgets;" that he "won't let private initiative do anything without having a flock of government spies on our trails," and so on. I could supply fifty more from my notes, but they would be of the same tenor. And mind you! a large percentage of these came from representatives and senators in congress, Democrats and Republicans alike.

Another phase of the general situation:

There has been a tremendous drive against monopoly. This was lead largely by Assistant Attorney General Jackson, but Mr. Ickes and lesser lights have helped carry the ball. The attacks have been general. There has been no distinction between good business and bad business. The result has been that every man who has some money tied up in business is wondering whether he is going to have to defend himself in some way, however careful he has been about complying with the federal laws.

The fact was called to my attention also that many of the businesses charged with monopoly are doing just what the government forced them to do. The unlamented NRA can be recalled without effort. Under the NRA, every unit or every line of business was told what to do and how to do it. Codes of business practice were laid down for them, bearing the approval of the President. Since NRA was relegated to the ashcan, we find a dozen suits being prosecuted against businesses for continuing to do the things they were forced to do when NRA was the law of the land.

Then, I would like to ask what is wrong that real trusts are not being broken up. The Department of Justice has some able lawyers who have been assisting Attorney General Cummings since the inception of the New Deal. It appears to a layman like me that five years ought to be ample time in which to make some headway against trusts and monopolies. I am moved to ask, therefore, can this new outburst against monopoly be a bit of politics?

But the turning of the New Deal wheel has brought one magnificent appointment to the Supreme court of the United States. I refer to the nomination of Stanley Reed to succeed the retiring Justice Sutherland. Mr. Reed has been solicitor general of the United States and as such has directed the nation's legal affairs under Attorney General Cummings. His service there, and before that with the reconstruction finance corporation, has been meritorious. There has been nothing but praise of his ability and of his character. He stands out as a great lawyer and fine personality.

The appointment is worthy of considering from two standpoints. Justice Sutherland's resignation and the subsequent appointment gives the present President control of the court. That is to say, the known division of the court between conservative and liberal thought has been switched from the conservative side to the liberal side by the appointment of two men. Actually, it accomplishes for Mr. Roosevelt the very purpose he sought to accomplish by demanding of congress that it pass the so-called court reform bill a year ago, a piece of legislation on which the President received the worst licking of his political career.

The second important consideration in the appointment is the high type of man named by the President. Mr. Reed is progressive in thought. The New Dealers always have counted him as one of their number, but I find many people who contend that Stanley Reed believes first in the law of the land and in obeying it, rather than indulge in wishful thinking on a lot of silly, untried schemes. The country is fortunate, indeed, to have a man like Mr. Reed on the court.

And, continuing the theme of unusual circumstances, I think reference ought to be made to the terrific beating that is being handed the southern Democratic members of the senate. They have been making a brave fight against passage of a piece of utterly assinine legislation—the so-called anti-lynching bill. Men like Harrison of Mississippi, Byrnes of South Carolina, Connally of Texas, and others, have been holding the fort against this vicious legislation. They ought to win, but they probably won't.

I have seen something of the race problem in the South, and I can understand what the basis of southern objection is. On the other hand, there is only one basis for the pressure which Senator Wagner, New York Democrat, is putting on the bill and the reason why the senate was tied up in a deadlock of the filibuster type for days. That reason is that Senator Wagner is trying to get control of the negro votes in New York city's Harlem area.

MINISTERING TO SPIRITUAL
NEEDSLESSON TEXT—Mark 2:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—Son, thy sins are forgiven.—Mark 2:5.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When the House Was Crowded.JUNIOR TOPIC—Who Can Forgive Sin?
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Bringing People to Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christianity's Concern for Spiritual Health.

Man is so constantly concerned with his physical nature, the needs and interests of his body, that he is prone to forget that there is within him a spiritual nature which is in fact his real self. The body which is the temporary dwelling place of the soul is most important—but relatively it is of but slight significance when considered alongside of the spiritual life of man.

Our lesson presents the Lord Jesus as being rightly concerned with the needs of the palsied man's body, but his act of healing was incidental to the infinitely more important act of forgiving his sins. Consider him, for his was indeed

I. A Hopeless Case (v. 3).
Incurably afflicted and helpless physically, but far more deeply afflicted spiritually was this poor man, for he was still in his sins. No man was able to heal his body, only God could heal his soul. He was indeed hopeless until he met Jesus. He knows no hopeless case. With God all things are possible, and Jesus Christ is God.

We are even as was this man, for without God we too are without hope (Eph. 2:12). Let us face the facts and admit that unless we are saved through Christ we are eternally and completely lost.

II. Impossible Conditions (vv. 1, 2, 4).

We say that the circumstances surrounding this man were such as to make it impossible for him to reach the Lord, for so they would have been apart from the spirit of divine urgency which impelled his helpers to cut through every excuse and brush aside every hindrance.

"Where there's a will there's a way." Had these men been controlled by convention they would never have put their friend at the feet of Jesus. But note that before taking up the roof they tried the door. They tried to use the proper entry, but it was blocked. It often is—sometimes by customs, sometimes by religious ceremony, often by vain philosophy.

III. Immediate Conversion (v. 5).
At once Jesus sees their faith and forgives the man his sins. God always welcomes and honors faith. Note that Jesus—who as God had the power to forgive sins—immediately cleansed him from all unrighteousness.

This man's affliction proved to be his greatest blessing. If he had not had the palsy he might never have met the Lord. Suffering properly borne may be a means of grace.

IV. Secret Criticism (vv. 6, 7).
What a serious thought it is that the unspoken word which we think we have hidden away in the heart or mind is known to God. "All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do" (Heb. 4:13). "There is nothing hid that shall not be known" (Luke 12:2). What does the Lord see when he looks into your heart and mine?

Their theology was faultless—their reasoning was logical, but their premise was wrong. They were right in saying that only God could forgive sin. But they were wrong in assuming that Jesus was not God, and therefore a blasphemer.

V. Miraculous Confirmation (vv. 8-12).

Forgiving sins was harder than healing the body, but these enemies of Jesus lived so much in the realm of the physical that they missed that important truth. He meets the challenge of their unbelief by going into their own limited field of observation. They were not able to test the effectiveness of His forgiveness of sins. They did not believe in Him, hence they would not receive it by faith.

Let us remember that the incident took place in the early days of our Lord's ministry. While we do not condone their hostility to the tender and loving service of our Lord to humanity, we can understand their slowness to accept his claims to divine power. In our day we have no such excuse, for all gospel history is available to us. God help us that we may not sit in the seat of the scornful and "demand a sign" before we will believe.

Harmonies of Nature
There are but few souls who perceive how far the harmonies of Nature resound in accordance with ours, and how much the great whole is but one Aeolian harp with longer or shorter strings, slower and quicker movements, breathed upon by the Divine Being before Whom it rests.—Richter.

Pure Heart and Clear Mind
Give me the pure heart, O Lord, to feel Thy presence near me. Give me the clear mind that understands.

Life at Lowest Ebb
When Alarm Sounds Off

Despite all that science has done to make our lot easier, it is still just as unpleasant to get up in the morning as it was a thousand years ago. Indeed, Julius Caesar may have found that less of a chore, inasmuch as the old Roman did not have electric lights, radios and other modern diversions to keep him up late the night before.

Some day somebody will offer the world a painless-early-riser, and the world will beat a four-lane superhighway to his door. Fortune, fame, and our everlasting gratitude will be his.—Springfield State Journal.

Cabinet Meetings

The procedure at presidential cabinet meetings is decidedly informal. There are no rules of debate, free interchange of opinion takes place on a friendly basis, only rarely is there a vote. No minutes or other official records are kept. Such decisions as are reached are merely recommendations. The President is free to submit or not submit a subject for consideration. He is also free to make any final decision he pleases.

The subjects discussed at the meetings are those introduced by the President.

Lemont Noses Out Orland In Exciting Game

In a fast and exciting game all the way through the Glen Eagles heaves of Lemont nosed out the Orland Park heaves on the Lemont floor by a score of 46-42. Hair raising shots and exceptional good floor work in both teams kept the winner in doubt until the finish whistle of the game. Steinhagen kept the Orland Park boys in the running all through the game with his eagle eye totaling 19 points.

Hallman was runner up with 10 points Heims scored 8 points. For Glen Eagles Reninger was high man with 20 points, Aberaus was second with 16 points.

In a return game here Sunday afternoon the Glen Eagles defeated the Orland Park heaves 60 to 26. It was too much. Reninger and Aberau's who scored 24 and 13 points respectively for the Lemont team, that the Orland boys could not overcome.

Mokena heaves defeated Orland heaves 36 to 32 to make it a game apiece. Mokena led at the half 18-9, Orland boys came back strong in the second half and for a while it was a nip and tuck affair but the handicap was a little too great to overcome and finally nosed out by 2 baskets Hallman was high scorer for Orland with 16 points, Steinhagen with 6 and Jim Davidson with 4. R. Walsh was high man for Mokena with 10 points, H. Cappel with 9 and W. Cappel with 6.

The Brennan Gables light weight team of Orland in the first game defeated the Glen Eagles lights 23 to 10. The defense of the Brennan Gables boys worked to perfection and only 4 baskets were acquired during the entire game.

Don Cleveland was high scorer for the Brennan Gables with 8 points and H. Uthe runner up with 7. The floor work and passing was of the highest grade and these boys are destined to go a long way in this indoor sport.
